The odor bears me backward To the heart of mother May, When the snowy sprays were tossla In the air of a lateful day—

A day when a purple splendor Came flooding a narrow life, And the pomp of life's royal pageant Displaced its calm with strife. Never the breath of the lilaes

Comes with the apple blooms, But the day of fate comes with it and the old time's deep perfum I smell the blossoming locusts
That drooped above our way,
The spiry mint, the sussafres,
All odors of the May.

And even in the bush of night
The old time with me seems,
And line breath and upple bloom
Are with me in my dreams.
